Phone scams: A corporate disaster waiting to happen

Every year, scammers steal billions (yep, with a b)

From executives to salespeople, just about everyone uses a mobile phone for work. Emails, spreadsheets, and instant messages make their way across personal smartphones and company-issued devices alike on a daily basis.

The problem is, scammers know this. As a result, they frequently target work phones knowing that, if their ruse is believable enough, they might get their hands on sensitive financial records and other proprietary data.

To compound matters, scammers are really good at what they do — and they're only getting better. In 2021, they stole an estimated $40 billion over the phone. In 2022, they more than doubled their intake.

Scammers attack from all angles

Don't overlook fraudsters — they're crafty

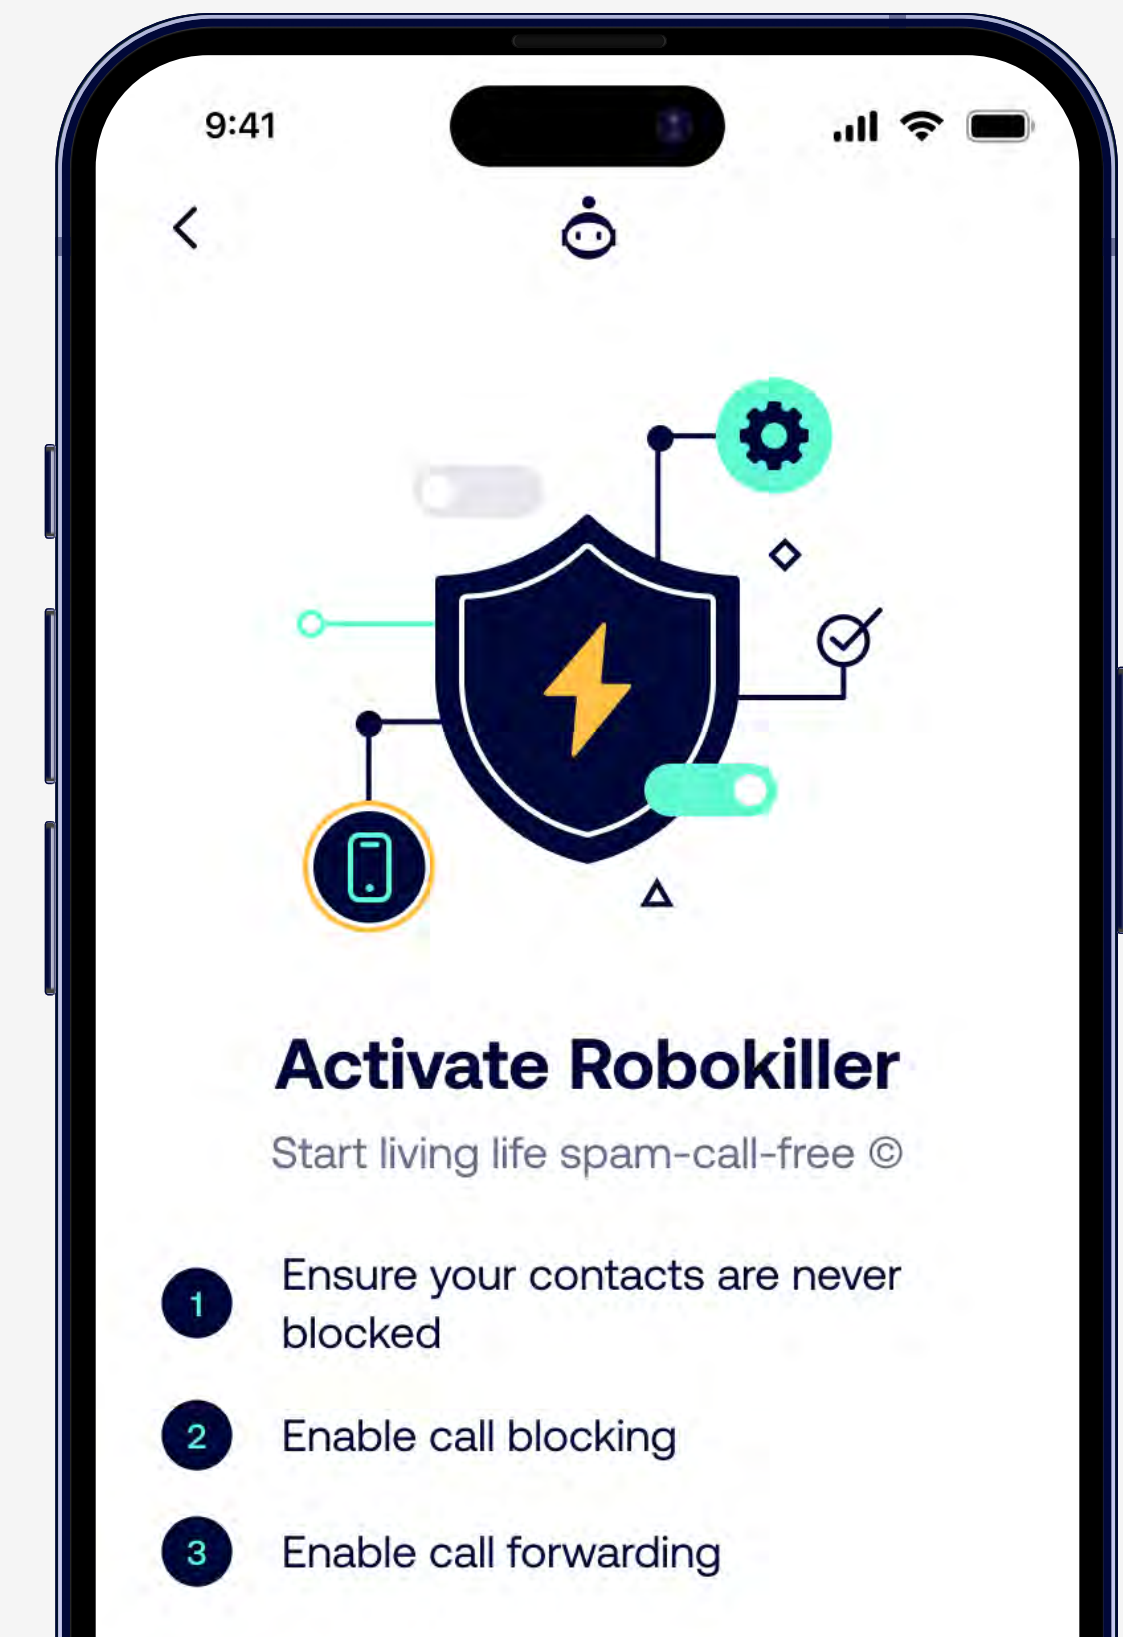

It might not happen to you or your closest coworker, but chances are someone's scam radar will eventually fail. Nearly half of companies had at least one employee download mobile malware in a 12-month span, according to cyber security firm Check Point.

Scammers have multiple paths to your organization's financials and proprietary information. Vishing (voice phishing) and smishing (SMS phishing) are particularly concerning mobile threats.

The former resulted in over $60 billion in losses in 2022, while the latter accounted for another $20+ billion.

Using these methods of social engineering, threat actors have pulled off numerous high-profile attacks.

One hacker tricked a Robinhood customer service representative over the phone and gathered millions of customer names and email addresses. Another hacker, via text, posed as an IT worker and accessed Uber's internal company systems.

There's a way to eliminate the threat of phone scams

Introducing the award-winning Robokiller app

Named the best robocall blocker app by the Federal Trade Commission, Robokiller eliminates 99.9% of spam calls and spam texts from reaching your iPhone or Android. And it can do the same for everyone else's device in your organization.

Here's how it works:

- Robokiller keeps a database of known scammers. To date, we've blocked over 600 million spam calls.
- If a number in that database tries to reach a phone with Robokiller installed, the call or text won't go through.

- In addition, Robokiller uses predictive analytics to proactively identify and block robocalls and robotexts before they reach your phone — even if they're not a previously identified scammer.

Bottom line: With Robokiller, risky calls and texts won't reach you or your coworkers.

Life with Robokiller for Teams

Keep your company's sensitive information out of the hands of scammers

No person's scam radar is 100% accurate, but Robokiller is as close to perfect as it gets.

Robokiller for Teams is just practical, good business. That's because:

- You'll save money.
- Scammers wouldn't make a living off of what they do if they weren't good at it. It only takes one scam to harm your company's bottom line.
- You'll protect your company's reputation.
- Time and again, brands take PR hits when hackers infiltrate their systems. Robokiller for Teams helps ensure they won't be able to do so by call or text.

- Restore peace of mind.
- It's natural to let your guard down now and then — Robokiller for Teams mitigates that risk.

Take chance out of the equation and make you and your team scam-proof.
